Fruits & Vegetables Galore: Helping Kids Eat More

USDA's Team Nutrition salutes school food service professionals for their hard work and dedication to students nationwide. USDA is now asking for help in addressing an increasing national concern — obesity.

Eating should be a fun and enjoyable experience that gets children to eat healthfully in the process. Children are not eating the five to nine servings of fruits and vegetables a day recommended by the Dietary Guidelines for Americans. At the same time, obesity and diet-related diseases among young children are increasing at an alarming rate. Team Nutrition believes that focusing special attention on encouraging children to eat more fruits and vegetables will help reverse these negative health trends.

Fruits & Vegetables Galore is a tool for school food service professionals packed with tips on planning, purchasing, protecting, preparing, presenting and promoting fruits and vegetables. Use Fruits & Vegetables Galore to help rejuvenate your cafeteria with colorful fruits and vegetables. Dress up your serving line to draw attention to fruits and vegetables to encourage children to make these selections. Solicit the cooperation of teachers by providing them with teaching tools or by supporting their educational efforts. Make your daily meal offerings competitive with other commercial options available to students. Use all these materials to get students excited about eating healthfully.

Local Education Authorities (LEAs) will automatically receive a copy of Fruits and Vegetables Galore. LEAs should order copies of the publication for all their schools (one copy per school). Extra order forms can be found on our Web site under Resource Materials or visit the Team Nutrition Web site at: www.fns.usda.gov/tn/.
